"Mr. Hoover seems to possess but one art, and that is the art of how not to do it."

—Democratic Newspaper.

Why certainly:

Mr. Hoover demonstrated "the art of how not to do it" when at the age of 23 he was sent by a British syndicate to Australia to establish waterworks, develop mines, design machinery and put into profitable operation mineral properties that had never before paid a dividend.

He demonstrated "the art of how not to do it" when at the age of 25 he was employed as director of mines by the imperial government of China.

When the Boxer rebellion put an end to this work he demonstrated "the art of how not to do it" by developing coal property, building railroads, handling a fleet of ocean going steamers, operating cement works, building a harbor and superintending 20,000 employees on behalf of foreign owners of Chinese concessions.

He demonstrated "the art of how not to do it" when at the age of 34 his reputation as a mining engineer became so widely extended that in order to handle his business it became necessary for him to establish offices in San Francisco, New York, London, Melbourne, Shanghai, St. Petersburg and Mandalay, through which he operated properties in South Australia, Russia, United States, Mexico, Corea, the Malay Straits settlement, South Africa and India having sometimes as many as 175,000 men under his direction.

He demonstrated "the art of how not to do it" when the directors of the Panama-Pacific exposition induced him to go abroad to persuade European governments to participate in that exposition.

He demonstrated "the art of how not to do it" when at the outbreak of the World war he headed the committee in London which returned to their country 200,000 American tourists stranded in Europe by the war.

He demonstrated "the art of how not to do it" when he organized the relief of Belgium and for four years fed seven million people at a cost of 928 million dollars, which vast sum was collected and dispensed with an overhead charge of 3% of 1 per cent.

He demonstrated "the art of how not to do it" when upon the request of President Wilson he became food administrator of the United States, being at the same time a member of the War council, the Export council, the Grain corporation, the Belgian and French relief and other activities.

He demonstrated "the art of how not to do it" when after the war he forced the allies against their will to permit and participate in the distribution of food throughout Austria, Poland, Germany, Yugoslavia, Roumania, Czechoslovakia, Finland, Estonia, Lithuania, Latvia and Armenia, which relief was extended under his direction and at a cost of nearly one billion dollars. It was said at the time (when no one was interested for political reasons in "smearing Hoover") that the organization, which

FARM PRODUCTS
DAY AIM OF STATE
AGRICULTURISTS

Acting upon suggestions from many sources to stimulate home consumption of the state's farm output, the State Department of Agriculture is to sponsor an annual California Farm Products Day. It is proposed to feature the occasion by state-wide gatherings of farmers and consumers, seasonal exhibits of fruits and field crops, special "buy at home" programs and public and private luncheons at which California farm products alone will be served.

The first California Farm Product Day has been set for Thursday, June 16.

"There is no way we can make the contact between urban and rural California more mutually profitable and generally satisfactory than by emphasizing and stimulating our home marketings," said Dudley Moulton, director of the department, in announcing the occasion. "We have felt that this could best be done by setting aside one particular day each year when California consumers may see how completely, abundantly and farmer can take care of his food problem. In projecting such a day we feel that we are not only aiding the farmer and the consumer, but that we are serving in the general upbuilding of California. We have in this state a potential market for everything that we grow, and it is our plain duty to develop that market by every means in our power."

Chambers of Commerce, civic clubs, luncheon clubs and private citizens generally will be asked to gather with the farmers of their respective districts for joint discussions of their common problems, under the general theme "Build the Home Markets." The Sacramento Chamber of Commerce has already promised its fullest cooperation. Boards of Supervisors, schools, both public and private and all other interested institutions, organizations and individuals will be asked to participate in the activities of the day.

The idea of economy will be worked out by having the farmers and consumers meet at their most convenient trad-

Speaker Garner in Dramatic Speech Quells House Sales Tax Rebels—Substitute for Defeated Sales Tax Is Quickly Passed.

SPEAKER JOHN N. GARNER quelled the house of representative tax rebels and assured the nation of tax legislation that would balance the national budget. The members of both parties who had successfully opposed the sales tax provisions of the bill drafted by the ways and means committee promised to be good and support the new bill introduced by the committee and as a substitute for the sales tax that had been defeated.

It all came about when the speaker took the floor and delivered a speech that was a combination of tempered argument, impassioned plea and camp-meeting exhortation. As he whirled into his peroration, an exalted house membership answered his appeal for those resolved to lead a new life to arise. En masse the congressmen surged to their feet and took the pledge to pass a tax measure that will balance the budget.

Then the house settled down to business. The ways and means committee introduced its list of new taxes to take the place of the defeated sales tax, and the various items were approved so rapidly that Acting Chairman Crisp had to stop the offering of items in order to give the engrossing clerks time to draw the various amendments.

The new levies as provided for in the house bill covers taxes on the following articles with the estimated revenue:

The house bill provides for the payment of the levied and excise and sales taxes by the manufacturer direct to the government with the method of collecting the taxes about the same as under the general manufacturers' sales tax which was rejected. That does not mean, however, that the tax will not be passed along in the form of an increased price for the merchandise, and there is nothing in the bill that would prevent the manufacturer from directly including the tax item in his invoice to the jobber or retailer and so on down the line until it reaches the consumer.

The fact that the house has passed a revenue bill does not mean that this bill is to be the law of the land. It is almost certain that the senate will not agree. The senate committee is very likely to substitute for the new provisions of the house bill the manufacturers' sales tax that was rejected by the house, and pass the revenue bill in that form. Should it do so it will mean another fight in the house, then a long conference consideration, and there is no prospect for an early adjournment of congress. Experienced members of both houses are now predicting that there will not be an agreement over a revenue bill earlier than September.

THE Hoover budget will be slashed a quarter of a billion dollars if the house accepts the recommendations already made and to be made by its appropriations and economy committees, Chairman Joseph W. Byrns (Dem., Tenn.) of the house appropriations committee asserted.

Just prior to announcing his resignation, on a plea of overwork, from the chairmanship of the special economy committee, Mr. Byrns said that body will submit recommendations calling for consolidations and economies totalling at least $75,000,000 and possibly a sum two or three times that figure.

Chairman Byrns said that hearings thus far conducted by the various committees handling governmental supply bills disclosed that at least $150,000,000 could be shaved off the budget figures submitted by President Hoover without in any way impairing the efficiency of the government. The committees plan to slash an additional $30,000,000 from national defense appropriations, Mr. Byrns said.

NORMAN DAVIS, one of the American delegates to the Geneva arms conference, arrived in Washington and went into a series of conferences with State department executives. Although officials declined to make public the nature of the discussions it was learned that Mr. Davis outlined the obstacles which have been encountered in the move to work out a general arms limitation treaty and reported to the department on the plan of action for the future outlined by himself and his associates. As matters now stand, many pressing European problems must be settled before there is the remotest chance for the negotiation of a treaty which carries reductions in land forces.

PRESIDENT HOOVER announced formally at the regular press conference that he is "absolutely opposed to the enactment by congress of additional soldiers' bonus legislation, and indicated that he would veto such a bill if passed. The President's statement follows: "Informal polls of the house of representatives have created apprehension in the country that a further bonus bill of $2,000,000,000 or thereabouts for World war veterans will be passed. "I wish to state again that I am absolutely opposed to any such legislation. "I made this position clear at the meeting of the American Legion in Detroit last September 21, and the Legion has consistently supported that position. I do not believe any such legislation can become law. "Such action would undo every effort that is being made to reduce government expenditures and balance the budget. "The first duty of every citizen of the United States is to build up and sustain the credit of the United States government. "Such an action would irretrievably undermine it."

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE Arthur M. Hyde called his department the "prize boob in the history of finance," because of its policy of making virtually unsecured loans to farmers in the face of rapidly mounting crop surpluses. "Under present conditions," Secretary Hyde said, "my department is now lending more money on thinner security and sustaining more losses than any organization ever has done before in the history of the world. Loans now being made by my department to small farmers who otherwise could not finance themselves could not by the furthest stretch of the imagination be called good business."

The Hyde statement was directed at the farm loan policy under which the Agricultural department makes loans to small farmers for economic reasons. He asserted that the government should not go into the business of making loans to farmers except in cases of drought, or floods or calamities growing out of natural causes. The current type of loans are unjustifiable, he said.

WASHINGTON crime is again brought into the limelight as police attempt to locate extortionists who have threatened harm to the children of three prominent Washington families.

Mrs. Betty Hanna Davidson, granddaughter of Mark Hanna, demanded police protection following receipt of a telephone call threatening injury to her daughter, Daisy, six years old, unless $2,000 was paid.

This threat followed shortly upon the disclosure that threatening letters had been received by Mrs. Alice Longworth, widow of the former speaker, and Sir Wilmott Lewis, Washington correspondent for a London newspaper. The letters threatened harm to Paulina Longworth, seven years old and probably the best known child, next to the Lindbergh baby, in the United States, and to Wilmott Lewis, Jr., five years old.

A RECOMMENDATION against development of the navigation and irrigation phases of the $772,000,000 Columbia river development project at this time was included in a report submitted to the secretary of war for transmission to congress by Maj. Gen. Lytle Brown, chief of engineers. While recommending that the sum of $16,000,000 should be expended by the government for the construction of locks and other aids to navigation in the Columbia river when private or state interests are ready to develop water power, Major General Brown took the position that the time was not ripe for the spending of any considerable amount of federal money on this huge project.

THE Missouri Democratic state convention at St. Louis instructed its 54 delegates to the national convention to vote for former United States Senator James A. Reed as long as he has a chance to secure the nomination for President. Missouri's delegation will have 36 votes. Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt is the second choice of the instructed delegation.

STILL hale and hearty, Maj. Gen. Adolphus W. Greely celebrated his eighty-eighth birthday anniversary in Washington. His friend, Brig. Gen. Davis L. Brainard, chatted with him, recalling memories of the Arctic tragedy that shocked the world 15 years ago. Together they had laid on the ice of Cape Sabine in 1884 within whispering distance of the icy death that claimed 18 of the party of 25. Brainard was his top sergeant. They are the only survivors of the seven who were taken from the cape June 23, 1884, after ten months of privation and suffering, during which Greely, then a lieutenant, observed his fortieth anniversary.

A TREATY between the United States and Canada for the construction of the St. Lawrence waterway may be ready for signature soon. William D. Herridge, Canadian minister, is now ready to negotiate. It only remains to secure the consent of the respective governments. Then the treaty will be written. (© 1932, Western Newspaper Union.)

THE FARMERS CORNER

By Ralph H. Taylor

It is axiomatic that the man who wants something badly usually pays for it dearly. Anxious buyers, as a general rule, count neither the cost nor their change!

And it is exactly this state of mind, judging from recent developments, which California agriculture must most carefully guard against in its present determined search for tax relief.

Already carrying a crushing tax load, due to the fact that 75 per cent of all California taxes are levied against real property, the farmer certainly cannot afford to jump from the frying pan into the fire—a dilemma which is all too possible if eagerness is allowed to overbalance good judgment.

Facing the facts, then, what are the advantages—and disadvantages—of the proposed initiative constitutional amendment, transferring current school support costs of the counties to the state?

The chief advantage of this plan, as set forth by its proponents, is that it would reduce the tax burden on common property in California more than $40,000,000 annually. This would be effected by abolition of the present "matching requirement," under which the counties now put up at least dollar-for-dollar with the state toward elementary school support, and double for high school.

Farmers, say the backers of the program, would benefit by large reduction of their farm tax bills, now admittedly exorbitant and in many cases practically confiscatory.

The proposed constitutional amendment, which has the backing of the California Real Estate association, the State Supervisors association and tentative support from some of the farm groups, provides that the state shall meet its added school support burden by applying two new tax measures—a selective sales tax and a tax on net incomes.

Opponents of the plan, together with many who strongly approve the objective but lack confidence in the means established for achieving it, cite three major objections to the proposed amendment.

First, they contend there is grave danger that the proposed new state tax levies would fail to raise sufficient revenues.

Second, they assert there is no "control" placed on boards of supervisors and other county spending agencies—no assurance that county expenditures for other purposes would not be permitted to mount gradually to the point where local taxpayers would be carrying the same burden as today, with the state carrying an additional one.

And third, they contend that the sales tax—one of the new state levies proposed—is essentially "a poor man's tax," a tax which would bear most heavily on the farmer, the wage earner and the small business man. There is the added objection to the sales tax that, being an indirect tax, it encourages governmental extravagance.

Rates and other details of the substitutionary tax proposals are still to be worked out. The estimated revenue to be derived from the proposals is still to be determined. And many other phases of the program call for searching inquiry before any final decision is reached.

California farmers should go into these final conferences determined to get relief, but equally determined that their tax saving is to be a real saving, not merely a change in the method of collection.

More than ever before in the state's history, California agriculture, before it accepts any tax equalization proposal, is confronted with an imperative need for sane thinking, careful investigation and sober judgment.

Loosely drawn tax legislation at this time, making a bad situation worse, would be little short of disastrous both for the farmer and the general taxpayer.

BABY PARADE A FEATURE OF THE ROSE FESTIVAL

San Jose, April 5—Babies of six counties, gurgling, laughing, crying, sleeping and shouting, will be a part of the Santa Clara County Fiesta de las Rosas in the baby parade to be held Fiesta time, May 19 to 21, Mrs. Anne Farnsworth, chairman, announced following a meeting yesterday.

The baby parade, a miniature of the big floral parade which will be held on May 21, will ask the entrance of infants from Santa Clara, San Benito, San Mateo, Santa Cruz, Alameda, and Monterey counties this year. Floats must be hand-pulled and decorated with flowers.

The parade will be held on First street in San Jose beginning at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. It will move thru the down town district accompanied by a baby band of musicians under 11 years of age. The wind-up will be at the Hotel de Anza where the health contest will be held and prizes will be awarded for beautiful floats.

Infants under five years of age will be admitted. Prizes will be offered for girl and boy entries of each year, both for excellence in health and beauty in floats.

The flower show, the grand floral parade, a junior olympic athletic meet, and a night fandango are among other events on the coming Fiesta program. The dates are from May 19 to 21.

CHET GARDNER TO HAVE NEW CAR FOR APR. 17 RACE MEET

Oakland, April 5—Charles Mason of San Leandro has joined forces with Chet Gardner of Long Beach, noted auto racing driver, and the two will campaign a new Miller Special on Pacific coast speedways this year. Northern California sports enthusiasts will have their first opportunity to see Gardner at the wheel of this car Sunday Afternoon, April 17, in the 100-mile classic at the Oakland Speedway.

Gardner today entered his speed creation in this event and by so doing earned the distinction of being the first knight of the open throttle to sign a blank for the meet.

Since his announcement that he will have the new job for the coming race, much interest has been evidenced by local fans concerning its details. Gardner explained that chassis was originally built for a 91-cubic-inch board track racer. Its motor will be a new one, of four cylinders with a piston displacement of 220 cubic inches. This is similar to the engines in the cars driven by Ernie Triplett, Wilbur Shaw, Bob Cary, "Wild Bill" Cummings, "Howdy" Wilcox and other leaders in the thrill sport.

CURRENT COMMENT

would never have existed but for his individual efforts, saved the lives of ten million children.

He demonstrated "the art of how not to do it" when under the administration of President Harding he took a humble department, a department that meant least at that time in the government of the United States, and made out of it one of the most outstanding bureaus, not only in this government but in any government in the world.

He demonstrated "the art of how not to do it" when he took measures which forced the price of rubber from $1.10 a pound to 30 cents a pound, saving the automobile users of the United States seven hundred million dollars a year.

He demonstrated "the art
of how not to do it" when he
the request of President Coolidge he took charge of the Mississippi flood situation and handled it in so masterful a way that although there were several million refugees only six lives were lost.

He demonstrated "the art
of how not to do it" when he put these refugees back on their lands, through the Red Cross and the generosity of the people gave them cattle, gave them machinery, gave them seed and made them self-supporting.

He demonstrated "the art
of how not to do it" when he met the crash of the stock market with its threat of universal financial panic and industrial chaos, by calling conferences which steadied the banking situation, which initiated private, corporate and public work affording employment for hundreds of thousands and which gave working men assurance that their wages would not be drastically reduced at the same time it assured employers that they need not fear industrial disturbances.

He demonstrated "the art
of how not to do it" when he called a conference of the governors of the 21 states devastated by the drought and worked out in cooperation with them and with the Red Cross measures which provided the people of those states with food and quickly rehabilitated them.

He demonstrated "the art
of how not to do it" when he suggested a moratorium of one year for Germany, persuaded all her European creditors to concur in it and thus prevented a debacle which would probably have involved Europe in war and certainly would have further deepened beyond measure the economic distress of all the nations.

He demonstrated "the art
of how not to do it" when he proposed a plan for the relief of unemployment so obviously workable that it commanded at once the support of the most outstanding business leaders and executives of the nation without regard to party.

He demonstrated "the art
of how not to do it" when he laid before Congress at the opening of the present session measures for reconstruction so obviously wise and practical that even a politically hostile House accepted them and helped to enact them into law.

In these and in innumerable other ways and instances the President has demonstrated, not "the art of how not to do it," but "the art of how

Wellman Electric
sterilizers save MONEY

EFFICIENCY of the Wellman Electric Sterilizer is unusually high; its operating cost is extremely low. This is the sterilizer being used today by those dairymen who are doing their utmost to increase their profits and to meet the requirements of state and city ordinances governing bacteria count.

The "dead-air" insulation of this sterilizer conserves heat and thus less electricity is required to operate. The tank is constructed so that only a minimum of water is used for sterilizing; again, electricity is saved, because no heated water is wasted.
Furthermore, each Wellman sterilizer is guaranteed by its manufacturer.

There is a style and size suitable for dairy farms with herds of any number up to 65 cows. The Wellman sterilizer is delivered complete with automatic water level and patented outlet, an approved switch box, and five feet of flexible conduit connecting the switch and heater; the electric heating elements are provided with an automatic safety cut-out. Thus, if the water is allowed to run dry, this safety device shuts off the current and damage to the heater is avoided.

Unlike sterilizers using other fuels, the Wellman Electric may be placed in your milk room. The sterilizer is compact.
Its use in the milk room saves steps and much time.

During April, May, and until June 15, 1932, you may purchase any size or style of the Wellman Sterilizers for the lowest down payment and easiest terms ever made available to dairy owners. For complete details and price quotations, get in touch with a Rural Power Representative through our nearest office.
